Columbia Classical Performers

Works by Bach, Beethoven, Mozart, Isang Yun, Piatti, and Vaughn Williams

Miller Theatre's Columbia Performers Partnership provides production and marketing support to Columbia University student performing arts groups. This partnership helps to cultivate the performing artists of tomorrow, to share Columbia University's resources with a broader audience, and to foster interdepartmental collaboration.

Hilary Baboukis, soprano

Catherine Rice, oboe

Alex Fortes, Ken Hamao, and Alexandra Rice, violin

Eli Lara, Elizabeth Lyon, and Tavi Ungerledier, cello

Josh Arky, bass

Xiaoyin Chen, Mi-Eun Kim, Wei Sim, and Becky Lu, piano

Founded in 2001, Columbia Classical Performers (CCP) seeks to support the community of classical musicians on campus who wish to perform in an intimate, stress-free environment for their peers. CCP works to give musicians performance opportunities by providing venues all over campus, coordinating recital logistics, publicizing events, and planning post-concert receptions. CCP has a dual function: to allow musicians an outlet to share their music with the public and to provide the Columbia community with free, high-quality classical music. Performers include violinists and pianists to oboists and a mandolin player. The diverse programming over the years has included works by Beethoven and Mozart, and new music composed by students and leading contemporary composers like Esa-Pekka Salonen.
